Database: Women and Social Movements

Reviewed by M.A., Journalism major and Communications minor, Sophomore on 09/20/16

Why do I like Women and Social Movements?

I like Women and Social Movements because I’m very interested in feminism and when I saw that there was a database specifically for Women’s Studies, I knew I had to click on it. It contains various forms of information about the struggle towards achieving gender equality, which still exists today. I’m actually taking a Women in Politics class this semester, so this database in particular might just come in handy very soon! I simply searched for ‘feminism’ and this piece about suffrage came up, and I actually just learned about women’s suffrage in my aforementioned class.

Full text

How have I used Women and Social Movements?

I researched more about women’s suffrage so that I’m prepared for my Women in Politics test in two weeks. I especially love this quote “The woman should be in the home as much as the man is, no more.” Women have been treated unfairly and unequally all throughout history, and it’s so paramount to learn as much about this inequality in order to understand how important it is to fight for equality. I’m using it for my class from now on so I’m excited to see what else I can learn from it. If I have to write a paper for my class, this is what I will use to get more information.

How can I use Women and Social Movements?

I will continue to use it for my Women in Politics class because it is the most relevant and simultaneously interesting database I’ve ever come across regarding history and feminism. I’m pleasantly surprised at how many databases Baruch has access to because I love learning new things, and having access to this many databases is like having my own giant library on my laptop! I just go to the search bar and put in any word(s) that pertain to a topic related to women’s rights. It’s like doing a Google search but on a website that’s dedicated to one particular subject.